Child Nutrition Recipe Box

The Child Nutrition Recipe Box provides Child Nutrition program operators with recipes to prepare healthy and delicious meals that meet meal pattern requirements. These recipes are standardized to provide meal pattern crediting information for all meal pattern components and include recipes made with legumes, whole grains, and vegetables from the vegetable subgroups including dark green, red, and/or orange vegetables. USDA Standardized Recipes for the Child Nutrition Programs are now available on the Institute of Child Nutrition's Child Nutrition Recipe Box (CNRB). ## FLU Prevention

The flu is a contagious respiratory illness that can be deadly. Pregnant women and children younger than 5 are at an increased risk to develop flu complications. Expecting mothers who contract the flu have an increased risk of premature labor and delivery and an increased chance of their baby having birth defects. When infected people cough or sneeze, they produce droplets that release into the air. Contact with infected droplets spreads the flu. A person contracts the flu when she/he touches, inhales, or ingests anything contaminated with the droplets. The flu can be passed in the air within a 6 foot range of the sick person. Adults may infect other people starting one day prior to when symptoms show and 5 to 7 days after becoming sick. Children may spread the virus for longer than 7 days. Symptoms begin 1 to 4 days after the virus enters the body.

Prevention

- ✔ Flu vaccine (most current)
- ✔ Antiviral drugs
- ✔ Frequently sanitize commonly used surfaces
- ✔ Eat healthy, exercise, and get plenty of rest

Workforce Registry

The SC Center for Child Care Career Development (CCCCD) is launching a new Workforce Registry soon. Trainers will have access to the new Registry mid-November and all providers and teachers will have access in early January. As part of the National Workforce Registry Alliance along with 40 other states, CCCC is bringing an advanced web-based system that will track and promote the training, employment, and educational accomplishments of early childhood care and education (ECE) and after-school teachers and providers throughout the state. This is an exciting update that will bring greater efficiencies and a one-stop location for you to track your training, education and credentials. Our staff is working diligently to make the transition to the new workforce registry as seamless as possible.
